San Francisco Museum of Craft+Design Presents Fashioning Felt
October 22, 2010 through February 20, 2011

Humble Fabric Takes Center Stage at San Francisco Museum of Craft+Design

WHAT: The many uses of felt, from wearables to walls to furniture and product design, come to life in the West Coast debut of Fashioning Felt, presented by the San Francisco Museum of Craft+Design (SFMC+D), October 22, 2010 through February 20, 2011. Organized by the Smithsonian's Cooper-Hewitt, National Design Museum, the exhibition of more than 70 works by designers across the globe examines both the conventional and innovative uses of felt over time, highlighting the material's unique characteristics and providing an extensive look at this ancient fabric with modern appeal.

Created by matting together wool fibers with humidity and friction, felt is an ancient material, and is believed to be one of the earliest methods for making textiles, carpets and clothing. The exhibition will present historic examples of felts, innovative uses of the material in clothing and furniture design, and the contemporary use of industrial felt in architecture. Fashioning Felt will also address the sustainability of felt, as its trajectory from raw fiber to finished product involves little opportunity for waste.
