

San Francisco Chronicle

UCSF Champions Herald New Hospital

By Catherine Bigelow

January 14, 2015

One of the new UCSF hospitals at Mission Bay glows in the night during the medical center's Champions Gala. By Catherine Bigelow

So you think you've got a full day this Super Bowl Sunday? Indeed, it's an afternoon of heavy lifting for coach-coaches as they critique the Pepsi Halftime Show starring Katy Perry and Lenny Kravitz or rate the $4.5 million, thirty-second ads filled with beers, bags of chips, Clydesdales, and cute pups.

Well, think again. Because on Feb. 1, the dedicated doctors, nurses and staff at UCSF Medical Center will be carefully moving 200 patients across town, from the Parnassus campus to its sparkly, new, state-of-the-art, $1.5 billion campus at Mission Bay. And you can read all those Social City deets from Saturday's super UCSF's Champions Gala soiree here.

But even amid this merriment (which starred stellar sets by country singer Tim McGraw and actor Kevin Spacey), UCSF Chancellor Dr. Sam Hawgood was already carefully contemplating those complicated logistics.

"We'll be moving one patient every four minutes," noted Hawgood. "Tonight is great fun. But on February 1, we've got no room to make any mistakes."

<http://blog.sfgate.com/missbigelow/2015/01/14/ucsf-champions-herald-new-hospital/#photo-580373>