“Our experienced doctors have deep ties to the Riverside community and share the Altas belief that the patient experience is our top priority,” said Rodolfo Saenz, M.D., an obstetrician and gynecologist at Altas Medical Group Riverside. “We are happy to provide access to everything from routine check-ups to specialized care in one location and invite interested patients to get in touch with us.”

According to studies over the past decade, the Riverside County community may have a deficit of up to 1,000 physicians serving a growing population of over 2 million residents. The new practice aims to address this shortage with a new model of medical care that, over time, aims to attract more health care professionals to the region.

“Both Riverside County and the health care industry, in general, have seen unprecedented cases of physician burnout and premature retirements. Doctors face a constant barrage of administrative demands, among other stress factors,” said Nishant Anand, M.D., president and chief executive officer of Altais. “Our mission is to reverse this trend and provide long-term support for health care providers with our business practices and technologies. Altais wants physicians and their practices to not merely survive but thrive.”

Altais is a health care services company creating business models and integrated, scalable technology solutions that enhance the patient experience, improve health outcomes, reduce cost, and drive professional gratification among physicians. Altais invests directly in physician practices, clinics and related business models. In 2020, Brown & Toland Physicians, a network of more than 2,700 independent physicians in the San Francisco Bay Area, joined the Altais family of companies. Los Angeles’ Family Care Specialists, one of the largest community-based and Latinx-led private medical groups in California, joined Altais in December 2021. Altais also has two independent primary care clinics serving essential civic employees and educators in the Monterey-Salinas market.
